What Gift to Give: The Results

Mostly A's: The Creative Type
Your loved one enjoys learning and working with their hands. Give them a DIY jewelry-making kit with everything they need to create their own jewelry. Kits are a great gift idea: you're giving them a ready-to-go creative experience.
For a first try, stainless steel charm necklace kits are perfect. They require no special skills.
Giving to an experienced creator? Opt instead for a Miyuki bead weaving kit, for a custom-made piece.

Mostly B: The Home Decor Enthusiast
Make them a trendy Jesmonite item: a vase, a small bowl, a candleholder, or coasters. Jesmonite is easy to use and non-toxic. It's poured into silicone molds and colored with pigments. A Jesmonite bowl is also stronger than plaster.
A few craft ideas:
- a stylish dish for keys or jewelry
- a soap dish and a marble-effect tray
- a candleholder or coasters, using kits from the Jesmonite category

Just getting started? Our guide to everything you need to know about Jesmonite can be a great resource.

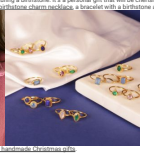

Mostly C: The Trend-Seeker
For him or her, give one of this season's trendiest pieces of jewelry. This winter, five styles dominate: vintage, beaded weaves, natural stones, animal print, and resin. Check them out in our article on fall-winter 2026–2027 jewelry trends.
To get started quickly, here are a few ideas:
- heart-shaped earrings with garnet cabochons, suitable even for beginners;
- a leopard-print charm necklace for a bold touch;
- resin donut hoop earrings for a pop of color;
- a multi-strand necklace made of natural stones for a layered look.

A charm necklace or bracelet is also a safe bet. It's quick to put together and stays on-trend.

Mostly D: The Sentimental Type
Give her a piece of jewelry full of meaning, featuring a birthstone. It's a personal gift that will be cherished for years to come. Discover the meaning of each stone in our guide to birthstones.
For a DIY project, let your creativity run wild: a birthstone charm necklace, a bracelet with a birthstone and a zodiac sign pendant, a ring featuring your loved one's birthstone—anything is possible! Simply choose the stone associated with the birth month of the person you're giving the gift to.
