How do you make a pair of natural stone necklaces?

In this new tutorial, discover a necklace idea for the upcoming fall season, which is just around the corner! The days are getting shorter, the light is softening, and the color palette of our jewelry is naturally evolving. This DIY project is inspired by that transition: natural beads blending powdery pink, sage green, heather, and matte gold—like an October forest glistening in a ray of sunlight. Each shade evokes the changing foliage, the subtle berries, and the damp earth after the rain. The small pearlescent medallion, accented with a golden sun pattern, adds a luminous touch that warms up fall outfits.

The second necklace, set on a serpentine chain, features a square rose quartz pendant with a crystalline texture, illuminated by a colorful heart at its center. Its frosted transparency beautifully captures the soft light of fall, while its rosy hues soften the overall look. Worn together, the two necklaces create a harmonious layered look, perfect over the collar of a white shirt, a fine knit, or a lightweight wool sweater.

Creating handmade jewelry is a wonderful fit for this season, when we love to take our time. This accessible DIY tutorial is suitable for both beginners and experienced crafters, and is ideal for handmade holiday gifts. You can personalize these necklaces by modifying certain elements of the tutorial, such as the pendants or the color of the natural stones.
