Want to layer up with some cozy jewelry to get through the cold months? This step-by-step tutorial guides you through creating a trio of bracelets made with burgundy and light green heishi beads, accented with gold Miyuki 11/0 seed beads, small Aurora pearl beads, and three ethnic beads in gold, red, and green. A harmonious set to wear together or separately, depending on your mood that day.

In terms of trends, this color combination is one of the must-haves for winter 2026/2027: burgundy adds depth, soft green brings a touch of freshness, and gold brightens the whole look. Worn layered on the wrist, these heishi bead bracelets pair just as well with a knit sweater as they do with a festive outfit. They also make a lovely handmade gift to place under the tree.

Each material plays its own role. The glass heishi beads offer a crisp, shiny finish with vibrant colors that won't fade. Miyuki seed beads, renowned for their uniformity, create delicate, luminous spacers. The pearlescent beads with aurora-like shimmer catch the light with every movement, while the ethnic-style beads add a touch of bohemian flair. Finally, the stainless steel clasps are a real asset for everyday jewelry: they don't tarnish, don't rust, and are resistant to both water and sweat.

Rest assured, this project is accessible even if you're new to jewelry making: it simply involves stringing the beads in the order indicated in the tutorial, then attaching the clasp. If you're unsure which clasp to choose, our handy guide on selecting jewelry clasps will help you find the right one.

What if you wanted these bracelets to reflect your style even more? Swap the burgundy for midnight blue, trade the light green for powder pink, or switch from gold to silver for a cooler look.
